

Changes are coming to lifelong learning at TEAM. In November it was announced that a TEAM missionary has been named to direct a project to create a new Department of Training and Development. Lara Meinke will be tasked with the goal of developing world class orientation, training and development for TEAM.

We are excited that this high-level commitment to energizing lifelong learning in TEAM will enhance organizational support with personnel and other resources in order to make a global impact. As our workers develop and maintain a lifestyle of learning, their growing effectiveness in ministry will result in God's Kingdom expanding around the world.

I continue to serve by producing resources for learning, and facilitating the various tools we have developed so far. These include online resources and face to face workshops to help prepare new workers as well as equip veteran workers to minister in today's constantly changing world.

You can take a peek at some of the tools on our website, www.lifelearner.org, or view a video report on YouTube (<http://youtu.be/Ej0gBinprKQ>) about the workshop we did in Vienna this Spring. I have also set up several blogs where workers can learn from one another: Exploring Culture and a resource sharing blog from the Centre for Lifelong Learning, in addition to News You Can Use.

On the home front, Lois has completed another career as a Certified Wound Specialist (but don't say that she is retired!) She is eagerly involved in ministry at church and increasingly in our neighborhood. You probably will receive a handwritten note from her; a sure sign that she is able to get to some of the things on her list that she has wanted to do for a long time.

In less than two weeks, Lois and I will travel to Tanzania to visit with Kevin, Bridget and four of the five greatest grandchildren we know. We are enthusiastic about seeing the Lord's work in a part of the world we have not yet seen, and excited to spend some time with them in "their" element. We will return with a greater understanding of their lives and work, and hopefully many pictures and indelible memories. They tell us that everyone who travels to Africa, falls in love with Africa. If that happens, we'll let you know.

On the way back to the US, we plan to spend a few days with my Mom and Herb Boyd in Valkenswaard, the Netherlands. Herb has been there almost 60 years, and Mom has been there almost 10 (!) Another part of the Kingdom work that we are privileged to see. We arrive back in the US on January 1, 2014: a new year with many new adventures facing us. While we are away, Chris will graduate with his BSN from Pace University. We eagerly anticipate welcoming grandchild number 6, as Chris and Naomi are expecting in April.

It was 35 years ago, on the day after Christmas, when our family waved goodbye to a bus-full of friends and family at Logan Airport, before getting on the plane headed for Costa Rica and language school. We are grateful the Lord is allowing us to partner with so many of you in this global impact, particularly for the part you have played in making it all possible. Thank you.
